Summary

Shared SKUs	Stock sync and order systems match items on SKU. When two items share one, stock counts land on the wrong item and overselling follows.	4
Missing SKUs	With no SKU, stock, warehouse and marketplace systems have nothing to match the item on, so it is skipped or kept in step by hand.	1
Missing barcodes (GTINs)	Missing barcodes can stop products appearing on Google Shopping and on marketplaces that require a GTIN.	1
Products with no images	Google Shopping rejects listings without an image, and shoppers rarely buy what they cannot see.	1
Variants without their own image	Shoppers who pick this option still see another option's photo, and feeds show the same image for every variant.	2
Shipped products with no weight	Shipping rates are worked out from weight. A zero weight means checkout can charge too little, or offer the wrong service, for these items.	1
Missing product types	Automated collections, filters and feed category mapping rely on the product type. Untyped products drop out of them.	1
Clashing product types	Collections and filters treat each spelling as a different type, so related products are split across them or left out.	2
Products with no description	A blank product page gives shoppers and search engines little to go on, and Google Shopping expects a description.	1
Duplicate product titles	Identical titles make products hard to tell apart in search, feeds and reports, and feeds may treat them as duplicates.	2
Zero or blank prices	An item priced at zero can be ordered for nothing, and Google Shopping disapproves it. Ignore this if the item is meant to be free.	1
"Was" price lower than the price	The comparison price is below the selling price, so the store can show a price rise as a reduction, which misleads shoppers.	1

How we checked: we read the product data your store publishes to every visitor, one page at a time. We did not log in or use admin access, and we changed nothing. Some fields (such as barcodes or weights on some stores) are not published, and the report says where that is the case.

Some flagged items may be intentional. The list shows where to look; you decide what to fix. Clarke Systems Group · enquiries@clarkesystemsgroup.com
